LEBANON: President Franjiyah will pursue his case for more stringent controls on fedayeen activities in a debate in Parliament today. The President's determination and the army's good performance so far have carried the day, but the chances that the fedayeen will acquiesce to heavy restrictions on their freedom are slight. All parties are working to avoid an all-out confrontation, however, and at least a temporary, if fragile, accord seems probable. Beirut airport has been reopened, the curfew relaxed, and the countryside was generally calm this weekend.
